NUMB. 2074

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9. 1742.

To RALPH FREEMAN, Esq;

SIR,

Think it is agreed on all Hands that in Biography, as in Portrait Painting, a Likeness is to be preserved, if we would give Satisfaction in either Science.

In Biography, Truth, Candour, and Impartiality, ought always to accompany the Author: It was therefore to contribute in some measure to this chief End of History, and prevent the present, as well as future Generations from being impos'd on, that I trouble you with the following Extract of a Character drawn for a great Personage, by way of Supplement to Mr. Daily Post's Article from Edinburgh, January 28, 1742.

I am, SIR, Your's, &c.

C. R.

WE have seen the Enemies of this HONOURABLE PERSON piquing themselves upon their Skill in Politics, and magnifying their own great Wisdom, shown in Volumes of Journals, Dissertations, and Occasional Writers. But what were all these? Were they all calculated for the real Service of the Nation? Would they either pay Debts, or take off Taxes? No; that would not have answered their Authors Purposes, who sought not to ease the People, but to make them restless under a Load which themselves had made necessary. The Schemes of this HONOURABLE PERSON have been quite the Reverse. If he promoted a Project for increasing the Revenue, it was because he thought it for the Advantage of the Publick. If he has countenanced any Severity towards Smugglers, it was purely out of Regard to the fair Trader. His private Character hath established his Humanity beyond the Reach of Prejudice: his very Enemies are so many Witnesses of his Clemency, and their unpunished, nay, unthought of Liberty the strongest Panegyrics.

That he hath maintained his Power for so many Years, against an Opposition equally violent and malicious, will in all times appear strange to the Many, and only to the Few. For that the Minister, who made it his Business to promote Unanimity amongst all his Majesty's Subjects, by treating such as any way derog'd it, with the greatest Kindness, and the most outrageous Offenders with the utmost Lenity, had impotent Enemies and powerful Friends, can surely appear no Miracle! That a Minister, who in respect of foreign Affairs, acted altogether on Maxims of Equity, never believed it justifiable to make War when Occasion offered, or to declare against Peace, when it was sought for on just and honourable Terms, should be esteemed in foreign Courts, will appear a natural Consequence of his Conduct! That a Minister, easy of Access, whose Ears were always open to Proposals, and whose Thoughts were always bent on the Encouragement of a national and extensive Trade, should have the good Wishes of the most eminent Traders, tho' not the Applause of the Retainers to Trade, will be accounted in all times no more than what might have been expected! But that the Foes of such a Minister, who in mere Opposition to his Schemes promoted domestic Confusion, a foreign War, and a total Interruption of Trade, that they might have the Pleasure of complaining of it; that such Men as these should be honoured with the Name of Patriots, even by the Dregs of the People, will strike succeeding Ages with Wonder, and pass, I am afraid, for a full Justification of those Outcries against Corruption, which come weekly from the most corrupt Mouths in the Nation, whom Corruption ever did advance to Power, and who are now endeavouring to corrupt the common Sense, as they formerly did the Honesty of the People!

It will by no means appear astonishing to any Man of Prudence and Penetration, that Schemes so just and equitable in themselves, should not in all respects be attended with Success; that would be supposing Human Wisdom superior to the Divine. How should the Schemes of a good Minister be carried into Execution, if he is not assisted by the World in full of mischievous, designing, and self-interested Men; and while, perhaps, the Majority of the rest may be deluded by a flimsy Eloquence, and plausible Pretence? Besides, the great Principle on which the HONOURABLE PERSON hath acted, viz. the restoring and maintaining Liberty, hath been, and must be, ever fatal to his other Views. For wherever there is Liberty, there will be Men who will make a bad Use of it; and where-ever these Men are, they will trespass without Fear, against the Laws of God, of Nature, and their Country. They will teeth the Kid in its Mother's Milk; that is to say, they will make use of Benefits in Possession against those by whom they were bestowed. They will set themselves up for the sole Lovers of Liberty, and, under that Notion, they will undermine, I mean in popular Opinion, those who maintain that Liberty which they abuse. By Arts like these, they may keep the best Minister at Bay, prevent the most public-spirited Designs from being put in Execution, and then, with that Effrontery which is natural to False Patriots, reproach him for not doing what they will not suffer to be done. These things, as I said at first, may pass upon the Many, but they will not pass upon the Few. When Time hath weeded out Prejudice, and Posterity calmly reviews those Scenes, of which our Passions will not suffer us to judge, Right will be done to all Parties, and true Greatness of Soul will be distinguished from Restlessness of Spirit.

I shall close this Discourse with observing, that as in the Morning of his Days, this Great Man triumphed over the Malice of his Enemies in Power; so he has again triumph'd over their Envy in the Meridian of his Glory. He hath shewn himself insensible of their Injuries and their Reproaches; and as he was constant to his Sentiments, in spite of all they could do, so he still keeps steadily to his Purpose, notwithstanding all they can say. He began the World with considering Things as they really are in Nature, and not as Mankind are pleased to represent them; he has always gone on in the same Track, and Time has constantly justified the Rectitude of his Conceptions. The present is, without doubt, a most critical Conjunction, and, as such, worthy of his Courage and Conduct; neither is it to be doubted, that he will bring himself, and (if allowed) his Country with as much Honour out of War, as heretofore he maintained her Trade and Safety, during the long Continuance of Peace. Those who are Enemies to both, as they really wish, so they affect to think otherwise; but Time, the Disposer of Secrets, will, I hope, ere long, reveal to their Disappointment, those Honours which yet remain to crown that Administration, which, like the Government of Pericles, may boast of being unstain'd with the Blood of Citizens, and having done more Good to Foes, than was done by former Administrations to their Friends.

Stockholm, Jan. 21. N.S.

THO' the Accommodation with Russia is said to be still at a great Distance, yet the Partisans of the Duke of Holstein and of the Old Ministry still give out that we shall have a Peace, and such a Peace as will be very much to the Advantage of the Nation. Tho' the Fleet is completely mann'd, yet some thousand more are raising by Order of the Court.

Copenhagen, Jan. 26. We are not a little surpris'd here at the Duke of Holstein's Departure for Petersburg; and according to the Advices from Stockholm, that Court is under some Consternation, whereas the Adherents of the Old Ministry don't seem at all affected by it. Mean time 'tis believ'd that this Event will farther cement the Engagements that subsist between our Court and Sweden.

Petersburg, Jan. 21. Monday last being the Birthday of the Prince of Hesse Homburg, who then enter'd the 37th Year of his Age, the Empress, who has presented him with a Gold-hilted Sword adorn'd with Diamonds, suppd with him at his House, and stay'd with all the noble Guests till Midnight; and on the Festival of the Baptism of Jesus Christ, her Majesty with the whole Court was present at the Anniversary Ceremony of the Benediction of the Water, which has been this Year much more grand than during the two or three last Reigns. 'Tis believ'd her Majesty will be crown'd at Moscow the 22d of April next O.S.
